Sopranos gradually move from previous note singing "lu" softly on pattern 1 at individual speeds. Altos follow doing the same with pattern 2 followed by TB on pattern 3. All continue repeating the patterns until the conductor gives the cue for the final chord.

Piano enter on conductor's cue. p

In the late 1830's, farmers, in what are now Ontario and Quebec, were unhappy with a government over which they had no control: the result was a rebellion in 1837 led by Joseph Papineau in Lower Canada (Quebec) and William Lyon MacKenzie in Upper Canada (Ontario). When the rebellion was put down, many of the rebels had to flee the country to escape punishment. This song pictures a French-Canadian exile in the United States looking at a river that flows back to his homeland and sadly asking it to say "hello" to the friends he left behind.

Un Canadien errant, A Canadian, banished
banni de ses Foyers,
from his homeland
Parcourait en pleurant
Was wandering, crying,
des pays étrangers.
through foreign lands

"Si tu vois mon pays,
"If you see my country,
mon pays malheureux,
my unfortunate country
Va, dis à mes amis
Go, tell my friends,
que je me souviens d'eux."
that I remember them."

Un jour triste et pensif,
On day, sad and reflective (pensive),
assis au bord des flots,
seated by the side of the waves
Au courant fugitif
To the fleeting current,
il adressa ces mots:
he addressed these words.

O jours si pleins d'appas,
Oh days so full of happiness,
vous êtes disparus,
you have disappeared
Et ma patrie, Hélas!
And my country, alas,
je ne la verrai plus!
I will not see it again!
